WOMEN & NON-BINARY ARTIST HUI: LOVE LETTERS

ROSABEL TAN

In A Short History of Asian New Zealand Theatre, each performer is invited to reflect on a time when they have wanted to quit theatre: why they didn't, why they endured. On opening night, playwright Nathan Joe boiled it down to one thing: the people.

As creative practitioners, we owe so much to the people around us. They are who inspire us, who support us, who keep cheering us on. And yet the grind of freelance culture often means we don't always have the space and time to truly acknowledge and thank those who we owe so much of ourselves to.

Join us for a gentle evening where you'll be invited to write a letter of appreciation for somebody who has shaped you as a creative. Materials and snacks provided!

Kingdom Come is an exploration and tribute to the themes and subjects of Karangahape Road nightlife, portraying the humans that make it up while parodying it in a tongue in cheek way with religious imagery of mythical angels, heaven and hell. Exploring the idea that heaven and hell are subjective constructs that are created by us on earth.

ZAHRA SALARNIA

Zahra Salarnia's exhibition, No. 28, is a multichannel installation showcasing the fragmentary and fading remains of artist's childhood memories. Within the interplay of discrete pictures lies a poignant narrative—a reflection of innocent childhood life in a remote, peaceful environment, juxtaposed against the political affairs of post-revolutionary Iran. No. 28 encapsulates the dichotomies inherent in the artist's early life experiences, provoking contemplation on the convergence of private and public spheres within memory.

Mulled Spaces reflects on the artist's dual identity as an Asian immigrant and an older gay man in Aotearoa, exploring the anxieties of aging and belonging within the LGBTQIA+ community. These murmured landscapes speak of 'presence', 'connectedness' and 'space' – searching for a want of belonging whilst contemplating on an idealised past.

LINDA VA'AE LUA, ELISABETH KUMARAN, SILIGA DAVID SETOGA, GARY SILIPA, SIONE FALETAU & CHRISTIAN ALAIMOANA-TURNER

A group show of New Zealand-born Samoan and Tongan artists responding to the events of the Dawn Raids in the 1970s and its subsequent ramifications on Pasifika people in Aotearoa New Zealand. To allow for healing and understanding, A Niu Dawn challenges and educates on a dark and lesser known part of our recent history. 'Niu', the Samoan word for coconut (a derogatory term for Pasifika people), pronounced like 'new' suggests a fresh beginning.

SITUATING BESIDE THEIR CANS OF WORMS

NAOMI ALLAN

Naomi's vessels embody a poetic transformation, akin to a plantation striving for photosynthesis before being halted by the kiln's fire, fossilising the clay, and capturing specific moods in so. Her ceramic installations, reflect the turbulence of living in a rainy central city district and the tensions of navigating well-being in such an environment. Her art, inspired by her indulgences in horror and science fiction, merges natural processes with human intervention, embodying both physical and emotional landscapes.

Taking inspiration from natural phenomena, Allen's ceramic sculptures explore the human tendency to project physical traits onto abstract forms. Cloudforms captures the amorphous nature of a cloud in delicate porcelain. These works mimic the fluidity of clouds, inviting viewers to reflect on perception's mutability. Each piece distils a cloud's shifting presence into a single form, challenging us to interpret the natural world. Allen bridges the tangible and intangible, prompting contemplation of the intersection between nature, art, and human experience, highlighting our deep connection to nature's complexities.
